

Press Release, 16 March 2015

The second InDialog Conference will take place in Berlin from 20 – 21 November 2015. The overall theme is “Community Interpreting in Dialogue with Technology”.

Berlin. The varying national contexts and professional needs, as well as the sheer mass of languages requiring interpretation, highlight the ongoing need for new and sustainable solutions and policies to support access to multilingual services within and among nations. As technology is becoming more and more evident in community interpreting today, it is time to examine its impact, opportunities and limitations in research, training and practice in the field. The second International Conference InDialog, on the subject of community interpreting with technology, is returning to Berlin on the 20 - 21 November 2015 in the Russisches Haus der Wissenschaft und Kultur. The conference will take place in conjunction with EXPOLINGUA Berlin, the 28th International Fair for Languages and Cultures.

InDialog is aimed at government representatives, policy makers, service providers, users and commissioners of signed and spoken interpreting services, researchers, trainers, interpreters, language and cultural mediators, and students. The conference will be a forum for networking and the exchange of research findings and best practices.

In lectures and debates, experts from all over the world will explore the relevance of dialogue interpreting in fields such as healthcare, the legal system, public services, education and mediation. A few of the expected thematic priorities are “Dealing with growing multilingualism and geographical distances”; “Community interpreting training and evaluation in different contexts”; “The possibilities and limitations of distance learning, virtual worlds and avatars”; “Community interpreting in national and international conflict situations”; “Community interpreting logistics and management”; “Community interpreting research methodology, data collection and analysis”; “Supervision and psychological support for community interpreters”; “New and hybrid forms of community interpreting” and “Tools for community interpreters”. The language of the conference will be English. Proposals can be submitted until 26 May 2015. Please use the online registration form at www.indialog-conference.com
