Sabine Braun is Professor of Translation Studies and Director of the Centre for Translation Studies at the University of Surrey (UK). Her research focuses on new modalities and socio-technological practices of interpreting and audiovisual translation. She has led several multi-national research projects on video-mediated distance interpreting and interpreting in virtual-reality environments (AVIDICUS 1-3, IVY; EVIVA), and has contributed her expertise in distance interpreting to many projects on public service interpreting (e.g. QUALITAS, Understanding Justice, SHIFT In Orality). She is a member of the DIN Working Group on Interpreting Services and Technologies. She is also currently a partner in the H2020 project MeMAD, which combines machine learning/AI and human input to create semi-automatic descriptions of audiovisual content.
